Obu City Celebrates 55 Years

「Obu Crescendo!」

In music, a crescendo is a gradual increase in volume or intensity, culminating in a powerful peak.

Obu has been steadily working toward its vision of becoming a sustainable city where everyone can live healthy, active lives. Now, with a new focus on “Health and Music,” the city is taking its community-building efforts to the next level.

A city where everyone can enjoy music

A city where everyone can live healthily and happily

A city where everyone can look to the future with hope

Guided by these visions, Obu City will continue to share its melody—one filled with hope and harmony.

SPECIAL TALK

The Toy Museum, Set to Open in 2027

Mayor The Aichi Irrigation Canal, which supplies water to Obu, originates in Otaki and Kiso in Nagano Prefecture. In recent years, these upstream areas have faced challenges in finding sustainable uses for timber as it reaches its harvest cycle. In response, the city of Obu signed a Partnership Agreement for the Conservation and Cultivation of Source Forests in 2023 and has been working to effectively utilize that timber locally. One initiative is the Toy Museum—a space designed to nurture children's creativity and imagination through play and hands-on experiences. The aim is to create a place in Obu where children can gather, connect, and grow.

Shimizu When I was a kid, I would often visit Aichi Kenko no Mori Park. But these days, it's so hot in the summer that playing outside isn't really safe anymore. So having an indoor play space in Obu would be amazing. Wooden toys really make you think, so even adults could enjoy them—it'd probably be a great stress reliever. It'd be fun if they had wooden play equipment or even a climbing wall.

Yanagi A life-sized wooden car would be cool too! Do you think if we pitched the idea, they'd actually build it? (laughs)

Mayor That wooden car idea is such a fun one. This will be the first toy museum of its kind in the three Tokai prefectures, and we aim for it to be a place where not only children, but also adults, can enjoy themselves.

Shimizu If we include traditional Aichi crafts as toys, it might spark a child's curiosity—and maybe even inspire them to become a craftsman one day. It could be the beginning of a journey that keeps them connected to Aichi, as they grow up and build a future here.

Yanagi Obu really does a great job supporting people of all ages—from kids to seniors—so it feels like a place where you can live comfortably and with peace of mind. I have friends who live here, and they're really happy with the support available for pregnancy, childbirth, and parenting. It's no surprise that the population is growing.

Mayor Totally. Increasingly, families with young children are relocating to Obu. I believe that supporting parents and children is something we should continue to prioritize. Since October 2022, hospital stays have been free for high school students, and starting in January 2024, middle school lunches will also be fully free. We're also working on making primary school lunches free, too.

Special Roundtable: Reflections on Obu

Exploring the city's charm and its future

To celebrate the 55th anniversary of Obu's city status, a special roundtable was held with Mayor Okamura and Obu City PR Ambassadors, actors Kurumi Shimizu and Miki Yanagi.

They shared their thoughts on what makes Obu special and their hopes for its future.

A City Alive with the Sound of the Violin

Mayor Masakichi Suzuki, known as Japan's "King of the Violin," was the first to mass-produce violins in the country successfully. In 1930, he founded Suzuki Violin in Nagoya. Five years later, in 1935, he built a branch factory in Yokone, Obu, adjacent to the Zaiin Research Institute, where he is said to have studied the tone and resonance of the instrument. In 2021, Suzuki Violin relocated its head workshop to Obu—a move that inspired the city to embrace the violin more deeply and promote community development through music. Since then, Obu has launched a wide range of musical initiatives, including school concerts featuring world-renowned violinist Kyoko Takezawa, the release of the city's official theme song composed by local violinist Saki Mizuno, violin lessons for Year 4 students, public workshops at community centers, and open-air classical concerts. All these efforts reflect Obu's vision of becoming a city where the sound of the violin resonates in daily life.

Shimizu I actually learned violin from kindergarten through Year 5 at the Suzuki Method school that used to be near Obu Station. Guitars and pianos feel more common, so getting the chance to try the violin in primary school is pretty special. I firmly believe that exposure to the arts from a young age helps children develop a rich sense of creativity. And the fact that they get to do it for free? I'm honestly a little envious!

Mayor Yes, the kids are always surprised when we tell them, "It's okay—you can touch the violin!"

Yanagi Absolutely. If I were in primary school now, I'd be excited to have the chance to play the violin. When I was a child, a friend who was taking violin lessons let me try it once, but having regular opportunities to engage with the instrument like this really feels unique to Obu.

Mayor There are even a few violins available at the local children's center. And the Obu Junior String Ensemble, formed in 2024, is set to perform at the ceremony marking the city's 55th anniversary.

Shimizu I actually just bought a violin again the other day. I'd love to take lessons from Saki Mizuno, the violinist who also serves as one of our PR ambassadors.

Mayor of Obu Hideto Okamura

Just like Masakichi Suzuki once dreamed of making Japan the home of the violin, we're working to bring that vision to life in Obu—a city of music and a true home for the violin.

Healthy City Obu:
Where We Are Today

Mayor Obu continues to grow steadily as a "Healthy City," and in recent years has earned a strong reputation as a place where nature, industry, and quality of life exist in harmony. In the official land value report released in July 2024, Obu was honored to rank first in Aichi Prefecture for average growth in both residential and commercial land prices—a clear reflection of its growing appeal.

Shimizu Obu's a popular place to live, especially with how easy it is to get to Nagoya Station—it's only about 15 minutes by train. Plus, it's so green and peaceful. I think it offers a really comfortable lifestyle.

Yanagi Yes, there are so many parks right in the middle of residential areas, so it's easy for kids to get outside and play—and I'm sure that gives parents peace of mind. Obu also has grape and strawberry picking, which adds to that feeling of being close to nature.

Mayor Even now, about half of Obu is covered in greenery. As a city, we're committed to supporting not only children but also our older residents. We refer to seniors who continue to live actively and with a sense of fulfillment as "koreisha"—a term that combines the concept of aging with happiness. Our goal is to extend not just healthy life expectancy, but also what we call "contribution longevity"—the time people continue to feel valued and connected to their community. We're also working to make Obu a city where dementia can be prevented, and where people can feel secure even after a diagnosis. This includes programs developed in collaboration with the National Center for Geriatrics and Gerontology, as well as initiatives like the Dementia Help Mark, which aim to create a more supportive environment for everyone.

Yanagi My parents are getting close to the age where dementia becomes a concern, so it's something that's on my mind. Although we live apart, I feel reassured knowing they could live safely in a place like Obu.

Shimizu In 2024, I appeared in a drama called Forgetful Hamlet, set in Obu and focusing on the theme of dementia. Looking back, I think it was a great opportunity to help raise awareness about building a dementia-friendly community.

What I Hope to Do as a PR Ambassador

Mayor Is there anything you'd like to do as a PR Ambassador moving forward?

Shimizu I had such a great time with the children at Yoshida Nursery, so when the Toy Museum opens, I'd love to be part of activities where I can spend time with kids again. I'd also love to share some ideas for the museum itself!

Yanagi I love dogs, so I'd love to help organize adoption events or opportunities for people to interact with animals here in Obu. I know many older adults are hesitant to have pets, but caring for animals can help prevent dementia and also reduce the number of stray cats.

Mayor In fact, in 2021, we introduced the "Ordinance on Coexisting with Dogs and Cats in Obu City" to promote a community where people and animals live in harmony. We've been supporting local organizations working to prevent stray cats and offering guidance on pet guardianship as well.

Yanagi I'd love to be part of something like that!

Mayor We truly hope both of you will continue to share the many wonderful things about Obu as our PR ambassadors. At the same time, we residents take pride in saying, "Obu is home to such talented actors!" and we'll be supporting you all the way. I also look forward to seeing you collaborate with other rising stars from Obu, like cellist Keina Satoh and pianist Miyu Shindo, to help bring even more excitement and inspiration to the city's future.

01 No More Dementia Worries

#DementiaAwarenessMonth #OrangeForAwareness

The city of Obu is leading the way in creating a community where no one has to live in fear of dementia. In December 2017, it became the first city in Japan to enact a basic ordinance on dementia policy. By July 2022, the city had trained over 20,000 dementia supporters and continues to expand its efforts. In August 2024, Obu launched the "Dementia Help Tag" — a symbol worn by people living with dementia to let others know they may need support. The goal is to build a more understanding and responsive community, and efforts are underway to promote the symbol nationwide.

The city distributes the symbol in the form of a rubber tag case to people with dementia or those showing signs of it. If you see someone wearing the tag walking alone or appearing confused, please take a moment to check in or offer help. With one in five people over the age of 65 expected to develop dementia, it's something that can affect any of us. Obu is working to prevent accidents and ensure that everyone can live safely and with peace of mind in their community.

Obu Orange Ring Monument

In August 2024, a public design competition was held for the Dementia Help symbol, open to both professionals and amateurs. Out of 293 entries, the winning design was created by Sakura Makino, a 20-year-old vocational student from Gifu Prefecture.

Her design uses yellow to represent people living with dementia and white to symbolize the wider community offering warm support. From a distance, the design appears as a smiling face—reflecting kindness, connection, and hope.

Obu City

Total area 33.66km²
Population 93,160(as of the end of June 2025)
Number of households
41,250(as of the end of June 2025)

The city of Obu is a key transportation hub connecting Nagoya, Chita, and Mikawa, about 15 minutes from Nagoya Station on the JR Tokaido Line. With a well-developed highway network, the city offers excellent accessibility while maintaining a harmonious blend of abundant nature, industry, and a comfortable living environment.

In 1906, seven villages merged to form Obu Village, establishing its current boundaries, and it was officially recognized as a town in 1915. On September 1, 1970, Obu was designated as the 24th city in Aichi Prefecture. For over 55 years, the city has embraced the concept of being a "Healthy City" as the foundation of its community development. In 2021, Obu welcomed Suzuki Violin Manufacturing Co., Ltd., founded by Masakichi Suzuki, known as "Japan's King of Violins," and is steadily progressing toward its vision of becoming "The Town of Music and the Home of Violins."

MESSAGE

A Message from the Mayor

Since becoming a city in 1970, Obu has built its community around the concept of a "Healthy City," working to create a vibrant place where industry and comfortable living exist in harmony. In recent years, the city has strengthened support for children and families, as well as for older adults and people with disabilities, advancing sustainable development that ensures peace of mind for residents of all ages. These continuous efforts have earned Obu a strong reputation as a "livable city," both locally and beyond. This success is thanks to the dedicated work of those before us and the warm support and cooperation of our citizens, to whom we extend our sincere gratitude.

Obu is now embracing a new challenge as "The Town of Music and the Home of Violins," with community development through music steadily gaining momentum. This includes violin classes at local primary schools and outdoor classical concerts at Obu Midori Park.

This year, as Obu celebrates its 55th anniversary as a city, the theme is "Health and Music." The catchphrase, "Obu Crescendo! — A City Where Health and Music Come Together," reflects the power of music to soothe the heart and bring joy and healing. Building on 55 years of progress, we will work alongside our citizens to make music a part of everyday life, fostering health and happiness as we confidently step into a hopeful future.

Mayor of Obu Hideto Okamura
